

www.e-rara.ch

Vol. III.

Index to the Three Volumes

www.e-rara.ch

Die Plattform e-rara.ch macht die in Schweizer Bibliotheken vorhandenen Drucke online verfügbar. Das Spektrum reicht von Büchern über Karten bis zu illustrierten Materialien – von den Anfängen des Buchdrucks bis ins 20. Jahrhundert.

e-rara.ch provides online access to rare books available in Swiss libraries. The holdings extend from books and maps to illustrated material – from the beginnings of printing to the 20th century.

e-rara.ch met en ligne des reproductions numériques d'imprimés conservés dans les bibliothèques de Suisse. L'éventail va des livres aux documents iconographiques en passant par les cartes – des débuts de l'imprimerie jusqu'au 20e siècle.

e-rara.ch mette a disposizione in rete le edizioni antiche conservate nelle biblioteche svizzere. La collezione comprende libri, carte geografiche e materiale illustrato che risalgono agli inizi della tipografia fino ad arrivare al XX secolo.

Nutzungsbedingungen Dieses Digitalisat kann kostenfrei heruntergeladen werden. Die Lizenzierungsart und die Nutzungsbedingungen sind individuell zu jedem Dokument in den Titelinformationen angegeben. Für weitere Informationen siehe auch [\[Link\]](#)

Terms of Use This digital copy can be downloaded free of charge. The type of licensing and the terms of use are indicated in the title information for each document individually. For further information please refer to the terms of use on [\[Link\]](#)

Conditions d'utilisation Ce document numérique peut être téléchargé gratuitement. Son statut juridique et ses conditions d'utilisation sont précisés dans sa notice détaillée. Pour de plus amples informations, voir [\[Link\]](#)

Condizioni di utilizzo Questo documento può essere scaricato gratuitamente. Il tipo di licenza e le condizioni di utilizzo sono indicate nella notizia bibliografica del singolo documento. Per ulteriori informazioni vedi anche [\[Link\]](#)

I N D E X

TO THE

THREE VOLUMES.

☞ The Numeral Letters refer to the Volume; and the Figures to the Pages.

A

ACCENTS, thrown farther back from the termination in the English, than in any other language, i. 202. Seldom more than one in English words, ii. 392. Govern the measure of English verse, iii. 115.

Achilles, his character in the Iliad, examined, iii. 239.

Action, much used to assist language in an imperfect state, i. 121. And by ancient orators and players, 125. Fundamental rule of propriety in, ii. 406. Cautions with respect to, 409. In epic poetry, the requisites of, iii. 212.

Acts, the division of a play into five, an arbitrary limitation, iii. 300. These pauses in representation ought to fall properly, 301.

Adam, his character in Milton's Paradise Lost, iii. 281.

Addison, general view of his Essay on the Pleasures of the Imagination, i. 49. His invocation of the muse in his Campaign censured, 87. Blemishes in his style, 239. 241. 258. Ease and perspicuity of, 266. 269. 273. His beautiful description of light and colours, 329. Instance of his use of mixed metaphor, 351.

I N D E X.

- Improper use of families, 392. His general character as a writer, ii. 37. Character of his Spectator, 53. Critical examination of some of those papers, 55. Remarks on his criticism of Tasso's Aminta, iii. 142. note. His tragedy of Cato critically examined, 297. 312. 321. 326.
- Adjectives*, common to all languages, i. 179. How they came to be classed with nouns, 180.
- Adverbs*, their nature and use defined, i. 189. Importance of their position in a sentence illustrated, 238.
- Æneid* of Virgil, critical examination of that poem, iii. 246. The subject, 247. Action, 249. Is deficient in characters, ibid. Distribution and Management of the subject, 250. Abounds with awful and tender scenes, 251. The descent of Æneas into hell, 253. The poem left unfinished by Virgil, 255.
- Æschines*, a comparison between him and Demosthenes, ii. 179.
- Æschylus*, his character as a tragic writer, iii. 329.
- Ætna*, remarks on Virgil's description of that mountain, i. 83. And on that by Sir Richard Blackmore, 84.
- Affectation*, the disadvantages of in public speaking, ii. 410.
- Ages*, four, peculiarly fruitful in learned men, pointed out, iii. 25.
- Akenfide*, his comparison between sublimity in natural and moral objects, i. 61. note. Instance of his happy allusion to figures, 327. Character of his Pleasures of the Imagination, iii. 158.
- Alphabet* of letters, the considerations which led to the invention of, i. 149. Remote obscurity of this invention, 150. The alphabets of different nations derived from one common source, 151.
- Allegory*, explained, i. 356. Anciently a favourite method of conveying instructions, 358. Allegorical personages, improper agents in epic poetry, iii. 227. 277.
- Ambiguity* in style, from whence it proceeds, i. 238.

I N D E X.

- Amplification* in speech, what, i. 408. Its principal instrument, ib.
- American* languages, the figurative style of, i. 130. 322.
- Anagnorisis*, in ancient tragedy, explained, iii. 304.
- Annals*, and history, the distinction between, iii. 68.
- Ancients* and moderns distinguished, iii. 25. The merits of ancient writers are now finally ascertained, 26. The progress of knowledge favourable to the moderns, in forming a comparison between them, 31. In philosophy and history, ibid. The efforts of genius greater among the ancients, 33. A mediocrity of genius now more diffused, 34.
- Antithesis* in language explained, i. 398. The too frequent use of censured, 400.
- Apostrophe*, the nature of this figure explained, i. 382. Fine one from Cicero, ii. 220. note.
- Arabian* Nights Entertainments, a character of those tales, iii. 90.
- Poetry, its character, iii. 107.
- Arbutnot*, character of his epistolary writing, iii. 86.
- Architecture*, sublimity in, whence it arises, i. 59. The sources of beauty in, 101.
- Arguments*, the proper management of in a discourse, ii. 359. Analytic and synthetic methods, 362. Arrangement of, 363. Are not to be too much multiplied, 368.
- Ariosto*, character of his Orlando Furioso, iii. 92. 267.
- Aristophanes*, character of his comedies, iii. 353.
- Aristotle*, his rules for dramatic and epic composition, whence derived, i. 42. His definition of a sentence, 233. His extended sense of the term metaphor, 336. Character of his style, ii. 12. 20. His institutions of rhetoric, 174. His definition of tragedy considered, iii. 288. His observations on tragic characters, 333.
- Arithmetical* figures, universal characters, i. 147.
- Ark* of the covenant, choral service performed in the procession of bringing it back to Mount Zion, iii. 185.
- Armstrong*, character of his Art of preserving Health, iii. 158.
- Art*, works of, considered as a source of beauty, i. 100.

I N D E X.

- Articles*, in language, the use of, i. 162. Their importance in the English language illustrated, 163.
- Articulation*, clearness of, necessary in public speaking, ii. 390.
- Associations*, academical, recommended, iii. 17. Instructions for the regulation of, 18.
- Athenians*, ancient, character of, ii. 167. Eloquence of, ib.
- Atterbury*, a more harmonious writer than Tillotson, i. 300. Critical examination of one of his sermons, ii. 300. His exordium to a 30th of January sermon, 342.
- Attici* and Asiani, parties at Rome, account of, ii. 188.
- Authors*, petty, why no friends to criticism, i. 43. Why the most ancient afford the most striking instances of sublimity, 69. Must write with purity, to gain esteem, 207.

B

- Bacon*, his observations on romances, iii. 89.
- Ballads*, have great influence over the manners of a people, iii. 88. Were the first vehicles of historical knowledge and instruction, 103.
- Bar*, the eloquence of, defined, ii. 160. Why more confined than the pleadings before ancient tribunals, 204. Distinction between the motives of pleading at the bar, and speaking in popular assemblies, 239. In what respects ancient pleadings differ from those of modern times, 240. Instructions for pleaders, 241. 352.
- Bards*, ancient, the first founders of law and civilization, iii. 104.
- Barrow*, Dr. character of his style, ii. 16. Character of his sermons, ii. 297.
- Beaumont* and Fletcher, their characters as dramatic poets, iii. 360.
- Beauty*, the emotion raised by, distinguished from that of sublimity, i. 92. Is a term of vague application, ibid. Colours, 93. Figure, 94. Hogarth's line of beauty, and line of grace considered, 96. Motion, 97. A landscape the most complete assemblage of beautiful objects, 98. The human countenance, 99. Works of

I N D E X.

- art, 100. The influence of fitness and design in our ideas of beauty, 101. Beauty in literary composition, 102. Novelty, 104. Imitation, 105.
- Bergerus*, a German critic, writes a treatise on the sublimity of Cæsar's Commentaries, i. 65.
- Berkeley*, bishop, character of his Dialogues on the Existence of Matter, iii. 80.
- Biography*, as a class of historical composition, characterised, iii. 70.
- Blackmore*, Sir Richard, remarks on his description of Mount Ætna, i. 84.
- Blackwall*, his character as a writer, ii. 41.
- Boileau*, his character, as a didactic poet, iii. 163.
- Bolingbroke*, instances of inaccuracy in his style, i. 253. 277. A beautiful climax from, 272. A beautiful metaphor from, 337. His general character as a politician and philosopher, 339. His general character as a writer, ii. 43. iii. 15.
- Bombast* in writing described, i. 88.
- Bosju*, his definition of an epic poem, iii. 206. His account of the composition of the Iliad, 207.
- Bossuet*, M. instances of apostrophes to personified objects, in his funeral orations, i. 381. note. Conclusion of his funeral oration on the prince of Conde, ii. 384.
- Britain*, Great, not eminent for the study of eloquence, ii. 198. Compared with France in this respect, 201.
- Bruyere*, his parallel between the eloquence of the pulpit and the bar, ii. 272. note.
- Buchanan*, his character as an historian, iii. 66.
- Building*, how rendered sublime, i. 59.

C

- Cadmus*, account of his alphabet, i. 151.
- Cæsar's* Commentaries, the style of, characterised, i. 65. Is considered by Bergerus, as a standard of sublime writing, 66. Instance of his happy talent in historical painting, iii. 59. note. His character of Terence the dramatist, 356.
- Camoens*, critical examination of his Lusiad, iii. 268. Confused machinery of, 270.

I N D E X.

- Campbell*, Dr. his observations on English particles, i. 174. note.
- Carmel*, Mount, metaphorical allusions to, in Hebrew poetry, iii. 190.
- Casimir*, his character as a lyric poet, iii. 152.
- Catastrophe*, the proper conduct of, in dramatic representations, iii. 304.
- Caudine Forks*, Livy's happy description of the disgrace of the Roman army there, iii. 57.
- Celtic language*, its antiquity and character, i. 193. The remains of it, where to be found, ib. Poetry, its character, iii. 106.
- Characters*, the danger of labouring them too much in historical works, iii. 63. The due requisites of, in tragedy, iii. 314.
- Chinese language*, character of, i. 123. And writing, 146.
- Chivalry*, origin of, iii. 91.
- Chorus*, ancient, described, iii. 291. Was the origin of tragedy, 292. Inconveniencies of, ibid. How it might properly be introduced on the modern theatre, 295.
- Chronology*, a due attention to, necessary in historical compositions, iii. 45.
- Chrysostom*, St. his oratorical character, ii. 197.
- Cibber*, his character as a dramatic writer, iii. 363.
- Cicero*, his ideas of taste, i. 20. note. His distinction between amare and diligere, 224. His observation on style, 235. Very attentive to the beauties of climax, 271. Is the most harmonious of all writers, 284. His remarks on the power of music in orations, 290. His attention to harmony, too visible, 299. Instance of his happy talent of adapting sound to sense, 301. His account of the origin of figurative language, 321. His observations on suiting language to the subject, 341. His rule for the use of metaphor, 342. Instance of antithesis in, 399. The figure of speech called vision, 407. His caution against bestowing profuse ornament on an oration, ii. 4. His distinctions of style, 10. His own character as a writer, 12. His character of the Grecian

I N D E X

- orators, 171. His own character as an orator, 185. Compared with Demosthenes, 189. Masterly apostrophe in, 220. note. His method of studying the judicial causes he undertook to plead, 245. State of the prosecution of Avitus Cluentius, 253. Analysis of Cicero's oration for him, 254. The exordium to his second oration against Rullus, 336. His method of preparing introductions to his orations, 339. Excelled in narration, 353. His defence of Milo, 354, 365. Instance of the pathetic, in his last oration against Verres, 378. Character of his treatise de Oratore, iii. 21. Character of his Dialogues, 79. His Epistles, 85.
- Clarendon*, lord, remarks on his style, i. 249. His character as an historian, iii. 67.
- Clarke*, Dr. the style of his sermons characterised, ii. 296.
- Classics*, ancient, their merits now finally settled beyond controversy, iii. 27. The study of them recommended, 37.
- Climax*, a great beauty in composition, i. 271. In what it consists, 408.
- Cluentius* Avitus, history of his prosecution, ii. 253. His cause undertaken by Cicero, 254. Analysis of Cicero's oration for him, ibid.
- Colours*, considered as the foundation of beauty, i. 93.
- Comedy*, how distinguished, from tragedy, iii. 286. 344. Rules for the conduct of, 345. The characters in, ought to be of our own country, and of our own time, 346. Two kinds of, 348. Characters ought to be distinguished, 350. Style, 351. Rise and progress of Comedy, 352. Spanish comedy, 356. French comedy, 358. English comedy, 359. Licentiousness of, from the era of the restoration, 361. The reformation of, to what owing, 366. General remarks, 368.
- Comparison*, distinguished from metaphor, i. 334. The nature of this figure, explained, 387.
- Composition*. See Literary composition.
- Congreve*, the plot of his Mourning Bride embarrassed, iii. 299. General character of this tragedy, 341. His comedies, 364.

I N D E X.

- Conjugation* of verbs, the varieties of, i. 183.
Conviction, distinguished from persuasion, ii. 157.
Copulatives, cautions for the use of them, i. 260.
Cornelle, his character as a tragic writer, iii. 333.
Complets, the first introduction of, into English poetry,
 iii. 123.
Cowley, instances of forced metaphors in his poems, i.
 344. His use of similes censured, 396. His general character as a poet, iii. 152.
Crevier, His character of several eminent French writers,
 iii. 13. note.
Criticisim, true, and pedantic, distinguished, i. 10. Its object, 41. Its origin, ib. Why complained of by petty authors, 43. May sometimes decide against the voice of the public, 45.
Cyphers, or arithmetical figures, a kind of universal character, i. 147.

D

- David*, king, his magnificent institutions for the cultivation of sacred music and poetry, iii. 183. His character as a poet 200.
Debate in popular assemblies, the eloquence of, defined, ii.
 160. More particularly considered, 209. Rules for, 213.
Declamation, unsupported by sound reasoning, false eloquence, ii. 209.
Declension of nouns considered in various languages, i. 170.
 Whether cases or prepositions were most anciently used,
 171. Which of them are most useful and beautiful, 176.
Deities, heathen, probable cause of the number of, i. 368.
Deliberative orations, what, ii. 207.
Delivery, the importance of, in public speaking, ii. 223.
 385. The four chief requisites in, 386. The powers of voice, ibid. Articulation, 390. Pronunciation, 391.
 Emphasis, 393. Pauses, 396. Declamatory delivery,
 404. Action, 406. Affectation, 410.
Demetrius Phalereus, the rhetorician, his character, ii. 181.
Demonstrative orations, what, ii. 207.
Demosthenes, his eloquence characterised, ii. 168. His

I N D E X.

- expedients to surmount the disadvantages of his person and address, 177. His opposition to Philip of Macedon, ib. His rivalry with Æschines, 179. His style and action, 180. Compared with Cicero, 189. Why his orations still please in perusal, 210. Extracts from his Philippics, 225. His definition of the several points of oratory, 385.
- Description*, the great test of a poet's imagination, iii. 164. Selection of circumstances, 165. Inanimate objects should be enlivened, 172. Choice of epithets, 176.
- Description* and imitation, the distinction between, i. 107.
- Des Broffer*, His speculations on the expressive power of radical letters and syllables, i. 118. note.
- Dialogue* writing, the properties of, iii. 76. Is very difficult to execute, ibid. Modern dialogues characterised, 77.
- Didactic* poetry, its nature explained, iii. 153. The most celebrated productions in this class specified, 154. Rules for compositions of this kind, ibid. Proper embellishments of, 155.
- Diderot*, M. his character of English Comedy, iii. 366.
- Dido*, her character in the Æneid examined, iii. 250.
- Dionysius* of Halicarnassus, his ideas of excellency in a sentence, i. 287. His distinctions of style, ii. 9. Character of his treatise on Grecian oratory, 173. His comparison between Lysias and Isocrates, 176. note. His criticism on Thucydides, iii. 44.
- Discourse*. See Oration.
- Dramatic* poetry, the origin of, iii. 108. Distinguished by its objects, 286. See Tragedy and Comedy.
- Dryden*, one of the first reformers of our style, ii. 19. Johnson's character of his prose style, ib. note. His character as a poet, iii. 123. His character of Shakespeare, 337. note. His own character as a dramatic writer, 340. 362.
- Du Bos*, abbé, his remark on the theatrical compositions of the ancients, i. 288.

E

- Education*, liberal, an essential requisite for eloquence, iii. 9.
- Egypt*, the style of the hieroglyphical writing of, i. 144.

I N D E X.

This an early stage of the art of writing, 145. The alphabet probably invented in that country, 150. Emphasis, its importance in public speaking, ii. 393. Rule for, 395.

Eloquence, the several objects of consideration under this head, ii. 155. Definition of the term, 156. iii. 1. Fundamental maxims of the art, ii. 157. Defended against the objection of the abuse of the art of persuasion, 158. Three kinds of eloquence distinguished, 159. Oratory, the highest degree of, the offspring of passion, 160. Requisites for eloquence, 162. French eloquence, 164. Grecian, 168. Rise and character of the rhetoricians of Greece, 171. Roman, 183. The Attici and Asiatici, 188. Comparison between Cicero and Demosthenes, 189. The schools of the declaimers, 195. The eloquence of the primitive fathers of the church, 197. General remarks on modern eloquence, 198. Parliament, 203. The bar and pulpit, 204. The three kinds of orations distinguished by the ancients, 207. These distinctions how far correspondent with those made at present, 209. Eloquence of popular assemblies considered, ib. The foundation of eloquence, 210. The danger of trusting to prepared speeches at public meetings, 212. Necessary premeditation pointed out, 214. Method, 215. Style and expression, 216. Impetuosity, 217. Attention to decorums, 220. Delivery, 223. 384. Summary, 224. See Cicero, Demosthenes, Oration, and Pulpit.

English language, the arrangement of words in, more refined than that of ancient languages, i. 137. But more limited, 138. The principles of general grammar seldom applied to it, 157. The important use of articles in, 162. All substantive nouns of inanimate objects of the neuter gender, 166. The place of declension in, supplied by prepositions, 170. The various tenses of English verbs, 184. Historical view of the English language, 192. The Celtic the primitive language of Britain, 193. The Teutonic tongue the basis of our present speech, 195. Its irregularities accounted for, ibid.

I N D E X.

Its copiousness, 196. Compared with the French language, 197. Its style characterised, 198. Its flexibility, 200. Is more harmonious than is generally allowed, 201. Is rather strong than graceful, 202. Accent thrown farther back in English words, than in those of any other language, 203. General properties of the English tongue, ib. Why so loosely and inaccurately written, 204. The fundamental rules of syntax, common both to the English and Latin, 205. No author can gain esteem if he does not write with purity, 207. Grammatical authors recommended, ib. note.

Epic poetry, the standards of, iii. 36. Is the highest effort of poetical genius, 205. The characters of, obscured by critics, 206. Examination of Bossu's account of the formation of the Iliad, ibid. Epic poetry considered as to its moral tendency, 210. Predominant character of, 211. Action of, 212. Episodes, 214. The subject should be of remote date, 217. Modern history more proper for dramatic writing than for epic poetry, 218. The story must be interesting and skilfully managed, ibid. The intrigue, 220. The question considered, whether it ought to end successfully, ibid. Duration of the action, 221. Characters of the personages, 222. The principal hero, 223. The machinery, 224. Narration, 227. Loose Observations, 228.

Episode, defined with reference to epic poetry, iii. 214. Rules for the conduct of, 215.

Epistolary writing, general remarks on, iii. 82.

Eve, her character in Milton's Paradise Lost, iii. 282.

Euripides, instance of his excellence in the pathetic, iii. 324. note. His character as a tragic writer, 330.

Exclamations, the proper use of, i. 402. Mode of their operation, 404. Rule for the employment of, ibid.

Exercise improves both bodily and mental powers, i. 22.

Exordium of a Discourse the objects of, ii. 333. Rules for the composition of, 337.

Explication of the subject of a sermon, observation on, ii. 357.

I N D E X

F

- Face*, human, the beauty of, complex, i. 99.
- Farquhar*, his character as a dramatic writer, iii. 364.
- Fathers*, Latin, character of their style of eloquence, ii. 197.
- Fenelon*, archbishop, his parallel between Demosthenes and Cicero, ii. 192. His remarks on the composition of a sermon, 346: Critical examination of his Adventures of Telemachus, iii. 272.
- Fielding*, a character of his novels, iii. 95.
- Figurative* style of language defined, i. 310. Is not a scholastic invention, but a natural effusion of imagination, 311. How described by rhetoricians, 312. Will not render a cold or empty composition interesting, 315. The pathetic and sublime reject figures of speech, ibid. Origin of, 317. How they contribute to the beauty of style, 323. Illustrate description, 326. Heighten emotion, 327. The rhetorical names and classes of figures frivolous, 330. The beauties of composition not dependent on tropes and figures, ii. 1. Figures must always rise naturally from the subject, 2. Are not to be profusely used, 4. The talent of using derived from nature, and not to be created, 6. If improperly introduced, are a deformity, note, ibid. See Metaphor.
- Figure*, considered as a source of beauty, i. 94.
- Figures* of speech, the origin of, i. 128.
- Figures* of thought, among rhetoricians, defined, i. 312.
- Fitness* and design, considered as sources of beauty, i. 101.
- Fleece*, a poem, harmonious passage from, i. 306.
- Fontenelle*, character of his dialogues, iii. 80.
- French*, Norman, when introduced into England, i. 194.
- French* writers, general remarks on their style, ii. 13. Eloquence, 164. 198. French and English oratory compared, 201.
- Frigidity* in writing characterised, i. 88.

G

- Gay*, a character of his pastorals, iii. 141.
- Gender*, of nouns, foundation of, i. 164;

I N D E X.

Genius, distinguished from taste, i. 46. Its import, 47. Includes taste, 48. The pleasures of the imagination, a striking testimony of Divine benevolence, 51. True, is nursed by liberty, ii. 163. In arts and writing, why displayed more in one age than in another, iii. 24. Was more vigorous in the ancients than in the moderns, 33. A general mediocrity of, now diffused, 34.

Gesner, a character of his Idylls, iii. 139.

Gestures, in public oratory. See Action.

Gil Blas, of Le Sage, character of that novel, iii. 94.

Girard, abbé, character of his Synonymes François, i. 230. note.

Gordon, instances of his unnatural disposition of words, i. 267.

Gorgias, of Leontium, the rhetorician, his character, ii. 171.

Gothic poetry, its character, iii. 106.

Gracchus, C. his declamations regulated by musical rules, i. 288.

Grammar, general, the principles of, little attended to by writers, i. 156. The division of the several parts of speech, 157. Nouns substantive, 159. Articles, 162. Number, gender, and case of nouns, 164. Prepositions, 171. Pronouns, 174. Adjectives, 179. Verbs, 181. Verbs the most artificial and complex of all the parts of Speech, 186. Adverbs, 189. Prepositions and conjunctions, 190. Importance of the study of grammar, 191.

Grandeur. See Sublimity.

Greece, short account of the ancient republics of, ii. 166. Eloquence carefully studied there, 168. Characters of the distinguished orators of, ibid. Rise and character of the rhetoricians, 171.

Greek, a musical language, i. 123. 288. Its flexibility, 200. Writers, distinguished for simplicity, ii. 34.

Guarini, character of his Pastor Fido, iii. 141.

Guicciardini. his character as an historian, iii. 65.

H

Habakkuk, sublime representation of the Deity in, i. 70.

Harris, explanatory simile cited from, i. 389.

I N D E X

- Hebrew* poetry, in what points of view to be considered, iii. 180. The ancient pronunciation of, lost, 181. Music and poetry, early cultivated among the Hebrews, 182. Construction of Hebrew poetry, 183. Is distinguished by a concise, strong, figurative expression, 187. The metaphors employed in, suggested by the climate and nature of the land of Judea, 189. 194. Bold and sublime instances of personification in, 195. Book of proverbs, 197. Lamentations of Jeremiah, 198. Book of Job, 202.
- Helen*, her character in the Iliad examined, iii. 237.
- Hell*, the various descents into, given by epic poets, show the gradual improvement of notions concerning a future State, iii. 273.
- Henriade*. See Voltaire.
- Herodotus*, his character as an historian, iii. 46.
- Heroism*, sublime instances of, pointed out, i. 60.
- Hervéy*, character of his style, ii. 27. 31.
- Hieroglyphics*, the second stage of the art of writing, i. 143. Of Egypt, 144.
- Historians*, modern, their advantages over the ancient, iii. 32. Ancient models of, 35. The objects of their duty, 38. Character of Polybius, 42. Of Thucydides, 44. Of Herodotus and Thuanus, 46. Primary qualities necessary in a historian, 47. Character of Livy and Sallust, 49. Of Tacitus, ib. Instructions and cautions to historians, 50. How to preserve the dignity of narration, 54. How to render it interesting, ib. Danger of refining too much in drawing characters, 63. Character of the Italian historians, 65. The French and English, 66.
- History*, the proper object and end of, iii. 38. True, the characters of, 39. The different classes of, 40. General History, the proper conduct of, 41. The necessary qualities of historical narration, 53. The propriety of introducing orations in history examined, 61. And characters, 63. The Italians the best modern historians, 65. See Annals, Biography, Memoirs, and Novels.
- Hogarth*, his analysis of beauty considered, i. 96.
- Homer*, not acquainted with poetry as a systematic art, i. 42.
- Did

I N D E X.

Did not possess a refined taste, 48. Instances of sublimity in, 71. Is remarkable for the use of personification, 373. Story of the Iliad, iii. 230. Remarks on, 231. His invention and judgment in the conduct of the poem, 234. Advantages and defects arising from his narrative speeches, 236. His characters, 237. His machinery, 239. His style, 241. His skill in narrative description, 242. His similes, 244. General character of his Odyssey, 245. Defects of the Odyssey, 246. Compared with Virgil, 254.

Hooker, a specimen of his style, ii. 18.

Horace, figurative passages cited from. i. 324. Instance of mixed metaphor in, 351. Crowded metaphors, 353. His character as a poet, iii. 36. 151. Was the reformer of satire, 159.

Humour, why the English possess this quality more eminently than other nations, iii. 359.

Hyperbole, an explanation of that figure, i. 369. Cautions for the use of, 361. Two kinds of, 362.

I

Ideas, abstract, entered into the first formation of language, i. 161.

Jeremiah, his poetical character, iii. 200. See Lamentations.

Iliad, story of, iii. 230. Remarks on, 231. The principal characters, 237. Machinery of, 239.

Imagination, the pleasures of, as specified by Mr. Addison, i. 49. The powers of, to enlarge the sphere of our pleasures, a striking instance of divine benevolence, 51. Is the source of figurative language, 311. 319.

Imitation, considered as a source of pleasure to taste, i. 105. And description, distinguished, 107.

Inferences from a sermon, the proper management of, ii. 382.

Infinity of space, numbers, or duration, affect the mind with sublime ideas, i. 54.

Interjections the first elements of speech, i. 115.

I N D E X.

- Interrogation*, instances of the happy use and effect of,
i. 403. Mode of their operation, 404. Rule for using, ibid.
Job, exemplification of the sublimity of obscurity in the book of, i. 57. Remarks on the style of, iii. 182.
The subject and poetry of, 201. Fine passage from, 202.
Johnson, his character of Dryden's prose style, ii. 19, note. His remarks on the style of Swift, 130. note.
His character of Thomson, iii. 168. note. His character of Dryden's comedies, 363. note. His character of Congreve, 364. note.
Johnson, Ben, his character as a dramatic poet, iii. 360.
Isaens, the rhetorician, his character, ii. 175.
Isaiah, sublime representation of the Deity in, i. 71.
His description of the fall of the Assyrian empire, 385.
His metaphors suited to the climate of Judea, iii. 190.
191. 193. His character as a poet, 199.
Isocrates, the rhetorician, his character, ii. 173.
Judea, remarks on the climate and natural circumstances of that country, iii. 189.
Judicial orations, what, ii. 207.
Juvenal, a character of his satires, iii. 160.

K

- Kaims*, lord, his severe censures of English comedies,
iii. 366.
Knight errantry, foundation of the Romances concerning,
iii. 91.
Knowledge an essential requisite for eloquence, iii. 9. The progress of, in favour of the moderns, upon a comparison with the ancients, 31. The acquisition of, difficult in former ages, 33.

L

- Lamentations* of Jeremiah, the most perfect elegiac composition in the sacred scriptures, iii. 198.
Landscape, considered as an assemblage of beautiful objects, i. 98.

I N D E X.

Language, the improvement of, studied even by rude nations, i. 2. In what the true improvement of language consists, 3. Importance of the study of language, ibid. Defined, 110. The present refinements of, 111. Origin and progress of, 114. The first elements of, 115. Analogy between words and things, 117. The great assistance afforded by gestures, 121. The chinese language, 123. The Greek and Roman languages, ibid. Action much used by ancient orators and players, 125. Roman pantomimes, ibid. Great difference between ancient and modern pronunciation, 126. Figures of speech, the origin of, 127. Figurative style of American languages, 110. Cause of the decline of figurative language, 131. The natural and original arrangement of words in speech, 134. The arrangement of words in modern languages, different from that of the ancients, 136. An exemplification, 137. Summary of the foregoing observations, 140. Its wonderful powers, 328. All language strongly tinged with metaphor, 335. In modern productions, often better than the subjects of them, ii. 153. Written and oral, distinction between, iii. 14. See Grammar, Style and Writing.

Latin language, the pronunciation of, musical and gesticulating, i. 123. 287. The natural arrangement of words in, 135. The want of articles a defect in, 163. Remarks on words deemed synonymous in, 224.

Learning, an essential requisite for eloquence, iii. 10.

Lebanon, metaphorical allusions to, in Hebrew poetry, iii. 191.

Lee, extravagant hyperbole quoted from, i. 363. His character as a tragic poet, iii. 340.

Liberty, the nurse of true genius, ii. 163.

Literary composition, importance of the study of language, preparatory to, i. 5. The beauties of, indefinite, 102. To what class the pleasures received from eloquence, poetry, and fine writing, are to be referred, 105. The beauties of, not dependent on tropes and figures, ii. 2. The different kinds of, distinguished, iii. 38. See History, Poetry, &c.

I N D E X

- Livy*, his character as an historian, iii. 49. 56.
Locke, general character of his style, ii. 23. The style of his Treatise on human understanding, compared with the writings of Lord Shaftesbury, iii. 75.
Longinus, strictures on his Treatise on the Sublime, i. 66. His account of the consequences of liberty, ii. 163. His sententious opinion of Homer's Odyssey, iii. 245.
Lopez de la Vega, his character as a dramatic poet, iii. 356.
Love, too much importance and frequency allowed too, on the modern stage, iii. 318.
Loveth's English Grammar recommended, i. 207. note. 260. note. His character of the prophet Ezekiel, iii. 201.
Lucan, instance of his destroying a sublime expression of Cæsar, by amplification, i. 76. Extravagant hyperbole from, 365. Critical examination of his Pharsalia, iii. 256. The subject, 257. Characters and conduct of the story, 258.
Lucian, Character of his Dialogues, iii. 79.
Lucretius, his sublime representation of the dominion of superstition over mankind, i. 58. note. The most admired passages in his Treatise De Rerum Naturâ, iii. 157.
Lusad. See Camoens.
Lyric poetry, the peculiar character of, iii. 145. Four classes of odes, 147. Characters of the most eminent lyric poets, 150.
Lyfias, the rhetorician, his character, ii. 175.

M

- Machiavel*, his character as an historian, iii. 65.
Machinery, the great use of, in epic poetry, iii. 224. Cautions for the use of, 226. 239.
Mackenzie, Sir George, instance of regular climax in his pleadings, i. 409.
Man, by nature both a poet and musician, iii. 102.
Marivaux, a character of his novels, iii. 94.
Marmontel, his comparative remarks on French, English, and Italian poetry, iii. 120. note.

I N D E X

- Marſy*, his contrast between the characters of Corneille and Racine, iii. 335. note.
- Maſſillon*, extract from a celebrated sermon of his, ii. 293. note. Encomium on, by Louis XIV. 299. His artful division of a text, 352.
- Memoirs*, their class in historical composition assigned, iii. 68. Why the French are fond of this kind of writing, 69.
- Metalepsis*, in figurative language, explained, i. 332.
- Metaphor*, in figurative style, explained, i. 333. 334. All language strongly tinctured with, 335. Approaches the nearest to painting of all the figures of speech, 337. Rules to be observed in the conduct of, 339. See Allegory.
- Metaſtaſio*, his character as a dramatic writer, iii. 336.
- Metonymy*, in figurative style, explained, i. 336.
- Mexico*, historical pictures the records of that empire, i. 143.
- Milo*, narrative of the rencounter between him and Eolodius, by Cicero, ii. 355.
- Milton*, instances of sublimity in, i. 56. 78. Of harmony, 304. Hyperbolical sentiments of Satan in, 362. Striking instances of personification in, 373. 375. 377. Excellence of his descriptive poetry, iii. 169. Who the proper hero of his Paradise Lost, 223. Critical examination of this poem, 278. His sublimity characterised, 282. His language and versification, 283.
- Moderns*. See Ancients.
- Moliere*, his character as a dramatic poet, iii. 358.
- Monboddo*, lord, his observations on English and Latin verse, iii. 116. note.
- Monotony* in language, often the result of too great attention to musical arrangement, i. 297.
- Montague*, Lady Mary Wortley, a character of her epistolary style, iii. 88.
- Montesquieu*, character of his style, ii. 12.
- Monumental* inscriptions, the numbers suited to the style, i. 302.
- Moralt*, M. his severe censure of English comedy, iii. 366.

I N D E X.

- More*. Dr. Henry, character of his divine dialogues, iii. 80.
Motion, considered as a source of beauty, i. 97.
Motte, M. de la, his observations on lyric poetry, iii.
 149. note. Remarks on his criticism on Homer, 244.
note.
Music, its influence on the passions, iii. 102. Its union with poetry, 103. Their separation injurious to each, 111.

N

- Naiveté*, import of that French term, ii. 33.
Narration, an important point in pleadings at the bar,
 ii. 352.
Night scenes, commonly sublime, i. 55.
Nomic melody of the Athenians, what, i. 288.
Novels, a species of writing, not so insignificant as may be imagined, iii. 89. Might be employed for very useful purposes, 90. Rise and progress of fictitious history, ibid. Characters of the most celebrated romances and novels, 93.
Novelty considered as a source of beauty, i. 104.
Nouns, substantives, the foundation of all grammar, i.
 159. Number, gender, and cases of, 164.

O

- Obscurity*, not unfavourable to sublimity, i. 55. Of style, owing to indistinct conceptions, 212.
Ode, the nature of, defined, iii. 145. Four distinctions of, 146. Obscurity and irregularity, the great faults in, 147.
Odyssey, general character of, iii. 245. Defects of, 246.
Oedipus, an improper character for the stage, iii. 316.
Orators, ancient, declaimed in recitative, i. 124.
Orations, the three kinds of, distinguished by the ancients, ii. 207. The present distinctions of, 208. Those in popular assemblies considered, 209. Prepared speeches not to be trusted to, 213. Necessary degrees of pre-

I N D E X.

- meditation, 214. Method, 215. Style and expression, 216. Impetuosity, 219. Attention to decorums, 220. Delivery, 223. 417. The several parts of a regular oration, 333. Introduction, ib. Introduction to replies, 345. Introduction to Sermons, 346. Division of a discourse, 347. Rules for dividing it, ib. Explication, 352. The argumentative part, 358. The pathetic, 369. The peroration, 382. Virtue necessary to the perfection of eloquence, iii. 4. Description of a true orator, 8. Qualifications for, ib. The best ancient writers on oratory, 19. 36. The use made of orations by the ancient historians, 61. See Eloquence.
- Oriental* poetry, more characteristical of an age than of a country, iii. 105.
- style of scripture language, i. 131.
- Orlando Furioso*. See Ariosto.
- Ossian*, instances of sublimity in his works, i. 74. Correct metaphors, 349. Confused mixture of metaphorical and plain language in, ib. Fine apostrophe in, 383. Delicate simile, 390. Lively descriptions in, iii. 175.
- Orway*, his character as a tragic poet, iii. 340.

P

- Pantomime*, an entertainment of Roman origin. i. 126.
- Parables*, Eastern, their general vehicle for the conveyance of truth, iii. 192.
- Paradise Lost*, critical review of that poem, iii. 278. The characters in, 280. Sublimity of, 282. Language and versification, 283.
- Parenthesis*, cautions for the use of them, i. 253.
- Paris*, his character in the Iliad, examined, iii. 238.
- Parliament* of great Britain, why eloquence has never been so powerful an instrument in, as in the ancient popular assemblies of Greece and Rome, ii. 203.
- Parnel*, his character as a descriptive poet, iii. 169.

I N D E X.

- Particles*, cautions for the use of them, i. 260. Ought never to close sentences, 274.
- Passion*, ii. the source of Oratory, ii. 161.
- Passions*, when and how to be addressed by orators, ii. 369. The orator must feel emotions before he can communicate them to others, 374. The language of, 376. Poets address themselves to the passions, iii. 28.
- Pastoral* poetry, enquiry into its origin, iii. 124. A three-fold view of pastoral life, 127. Rules for pastoral writing, ib. Its scenery, 129. Characters, 132. Subjects, 135. Comparative merits of ancient pastoral writers, 137. And of moderns, 139.
- Pathetic*, the proper management of, in a discourse, ii. 369. Fine instance of, from Cicero, 379.
- Pauses*, the due uses of, in public speaking, ii. 396. In poetry, 399. iii. 117.
- Pericles*, the first who brought eloquence to any degree of perfection, ii. 169. His general character, 170.
- Period*. See Sentence.
- Personification*, the peculiar advantages of the English language in, 167. Limitations of gender in, 168. Objections against the practice of, answered, 366. The disposition to animate the objects about us, natural to mankind, 367. This disposition may account for the number of heathen divinities, 368. Three degrees of this figure, 369. Rules for the management of the highest degree of, 378. Caution for the use of, in prose compositions, 379. See Apostrophe.
- Persius*, a character of his Satires, iii. 160.
- Perpicuity*, essential to a good style, i. 211. Not merely a negative virtue, 212. The three qualities of, 213.
- Persuasion*, distinguished from conviction, ii. 158. Objection brought from the abuse of this art, answered, 159. Rules for, 210.
- Peruvians*, their method of transmitting their thoughts to each other, i. 146.
- Petronius Arbitr*, his address to the declaimers of his time, ii. 195.

I N D E X.

Pharsalia. See Lucan.

Pherecydes of Scyros, the first prose writer, i. 132.

Philips, character of his pastorals, iii. 140.

Philosophers, modern, their superiority over the ancient, unquestionable, iii. 31.

Philosophy, the proper style of writing adapted to, iii. 73.

Proper embellishments for, 74.

Pictures, the first essay toward writing, i. 142.

Pindar, his character as a lyric poet, iii. 150.

Pitcairn, Dr. extravagant hyperbole cited from, i. 366.

Plato, character of his dialogues, iii. 78.

Plautus, his character as a dramatic poet, iii. 355.

Pleaders at the bar, instructions to, ii. 244. 352.

Pliny's Letters, general character of, iii. 84.

Plutarch, his character as a biographer, iii. 70.

Poetry, in what sense descriptive, and in what imitative, i. 108. Is more ancient than prose, 131. Source of the pleasure we receive from the figurative style of, 374. Test of the merit of, 395. Whence the difficulty of reading poetry arises, ii. 398. Compared with oratory, iii. 2. Epic, the standards of, 36. Definition of poetry, 98. Is addressed to the imagination and the passions, ibid. Its origin, 100. In what sense older than prose, ibid. Its union with music, 103. Ancient history and instruction first conveyed in poetry, 104. Oriental, more characteristical of an age than of a country, 105. Gothic, Celtic, and Grecian, 106. Origin of the different kinds of, 108. Was more vigorous in its first rude essays than under refinement, 109. Was injured by the separation of music from it, 111. Metrical feet, invention of, 113. These measures not applicable to English poetry, 115. English heroic verse, the structure of, 116. French poetry, 117. Rhyme and blank verse compared, 119. Progress of English versification, 121. Pastorals, 124. Lyrics, 145. Didactic poetry, 153. Descriptive poetry, 164. Hebrew poetry, 180. Epic poetry, 205. Poetic characters, two kinds of, 222. Dramatic poetry, 286.

I N D E X.

- Pointing*, cannot correct a confused sentence, i. 252.
- Politics*, the science of, why ill understood among the ancients, iii. 48.
- Polybius*, his character as an historian, iii. 42.
- Pope*, criticism on a passage in his Homer, i. 77. Prose specimen from, consisting of short sentences, 235. Other specimens of his style, 267. 278. Confused mixtures of metaphorical and plain language in, 346. Mixed metaphor in, 352. Confused personification, 378. Instance of his fondness for antitheses, 402. Character of his epistolary writings, iii. 86. Criticism on, 87. Construction of his verse, 118. Peculiar character of his versification, 123. The pastorals, 135, 140. His ethic epistles, 161. The merits of his various poems examined, 162. Character of his translation of Homer 242.
- Precision* in language, in what it consists, i. 215. The importance of, 216. 237. Requisites to, 230.
- Prepositions*, whether more ancient than the declension of nouns by cases, i. 171. Whether more useful and beautiful, 176. Dr. Campbell's observations on, 174. note. Their great use in speech, 190.
- Prior*, allegory cited from, i. 357.
- Pronouns*, their use, varieties, and cases, i. 174. Relative, instances illustrating the importance of their proper position in a sentence, 241.
- Pronunciation*, distinctness of, necessary in public speaking, ii. 390. Tones of, 401.
- Proverbs*, book of, a didactic poem, iii, 197.
- Psalms* xviii. sublime representation of the Deity in, i. 69. lxxxth, a fine allegory from, 357. Remarks on the poetic construction of the Psalms, iii. 183. 191.
- Pulpit*, the eloquence of defined, ii. 161. English and French sermons compared, 201. The practice of reading sermons in England disadvantageous to oratory, 205. The art of persuasion resigned to the puritans, ibid. Advantages and disadvantages of pulpit-eloquence, 270. Rules for preaching, 274. The chief characteristics of pulpit eloquence, 277. Whether it is best to read sermons, or deliver them extempore, 289. Pronunciation, 290. Remarks on French Sermons, 291. Cause of the dry argumentative style of English sermons, 294. General observations, 297.

I N D E X.

Pyssistratus, the first who cultivated the arts of speech, ii. 169.

Q

Quintilian, his ideas of taste, i. 20. note. His account of the ancient division of the several parts of speech, 158. note. His remarks on the importance of the study of Grammar, 191. On perspicuity of style, 211. 221. On climax, 283. On the structure of sentences, 272. Which ought not to offend the ear, 282. 295. His caution against too great an attention to harmony, 298. His caution against mixed metaphor, 349. His fine apostrophe on the death of his son, 383. His rule for the use of similes, 396. His direction for the use of figures of style, ii. 5. His distinctions of style, 10. 25. His instructions for good writing, 46. 47. His character of Cicero's oratory, 187. His instructions to public speakers for preserving decorums, 221. His instructions to judicial pleaders, 245. His observations on exordiums to replies in debate. 345. On the proper division of an oration, 349. His mode of addressing the passions, 375. His lively representation of the effects of depravity, iii. 5. Is the best ancient writer on oratory, 22.

R

Racine, his character as a tragic poet iii. 334.
Ramsay, Allan, character of his Gentle Shepherd iii. 144.
Rapin, P. remarks on his parallels between Greek and Roman writers, ii. 191.
Retz, cardinal de, character, of his Memoirs, iii. 69.
Rhetoricians, Grecian, rise and character of, ii. 171.
Rhyme, in English verse, unfavourable to sublimity, i. 77. And blank verse compared, iii. 121. The former, why

I N D E X.

- improper in the Greek and Latin languages, 122. The first introduction of couplets in English poetry, 123.
- Richardson*, a character of his novels, iii. 95.
- Ridicule*, an instrument often misapplied, iii. 345.
- Robinson Crusoe*, a character of that novel, iii. 95.
- Romance*, derivation of the term, iii. 92. See Novels.
- Romans*, derived their learning from Greece, ii. 182. Comparison between them and the Greeks, 184. Historical view of their eloquence, 185. Oratorical character of Cicero, 186. Era of the decline of eloquence among, 193.
- Roussseau*, Jean Baptiste, his character as a lyric poet, iii. 152.
- Rowe*, his character as a tragic poet, iii. 341.

S

- Sallust*, his character as an historian, iii. 49.
- Sanazarius*, his piscatory eclogues, iii. 139.
- Satan*, examination of his character in Milton's Paradise Lost, iii. 280.
- Satire*, poetical, general remarks on the style of, iii. 159.
- Saxon* language, how established in England, i. 193.
- Scenes*, dramatic, what, and the proper conduct of, iii. 307.
- Scriptures*, sacred, the figurative style of, remarked, i. 130. The translators of, happy in suiting their numbers to the subject, 302. Fine apostrophe in, 385. Present us with the most ancient monuments of poetry extant, iii. 180. The diversity of style in the several books of, 181. The Psalms of David, 182. No other writings abound with such bold and animated figures 188. Parables, 195. Bold and sublime instances of personification in, ibid. Book of Proverbs, 197. Lamentations of Jeremiah, 198.
- Scuderi*, madam, her romances, iii. 93.
- Seneca*, his frequent antitheses censured, i. 400. Character of his general style, ii. 15. iii. 75. His epistolary writings, 81.

I N D E X.

Sentence in language, definition of, i. 232. Distinguished into long and short, 233. A variety in, to be studied, 236. The properties essential to a perfect sentence, 237. A principal rule for arranging the members of, 238. Position of adverbs, ib. And relative pronouns, 241. Unity of a sentence, rules for preserving, 246. Pointing, 252. Parentheses, 253. Should always be brought to a perfect close, 254. Strength, 257. Should be cleared of redundancies, 258. Due attention to particles recommended, 260. The omission of particles sometimes connects objects closer together, 263. Directions for placing the important words, 265. Climax, 271. A like order necessary to be observed in all assertions or propositions, 272. Sentences ought not to conclude with a feeble word, 273. Fundamental rule in the construction of, 280. Sound not to be disregarded, 282. Two circumstances to be attended to for producing harmony in, 283. 293. Rules of the ancient rhetoricians for this purpose, 286. Why harmony much less studied now than formerly, 287. English words cannot be so exactly measured by metrical feet, as those of Greek and Latin, 291. What is required for the musical close of a sentence, 298. Unmeaning words introduced merely to round a sentence, a great blemish, ibid. Sounds ought to be adapted to sense, 300.

Sermons, English, compared with French, ii. 201. Unity an indispensable requisite in, 278. The subject ought to be precise and particular, 280. The subject not to be exhausted, 281. Cautions against dryness, 282. And against conforming to fashionable modes of preaching, 285. Style, 286. Quaint expressions, 288. Whether best to be written or delivered extempore, 289. Delivery, 290. Remarks on French Sermons, 291. Cause of the dry argumentative Style of English Sermons, 294. General observations, 297. Remarks on the proper division of, 347. Conclusion; 382. Delivery, 385.

Sévigné, Madame de, character of her letters, iii. 87.

Shaftesbury, Lord, observations on his style, i. 219. 236.

I N D E X.

250. 268. 269. 299. 354. His general character as a writer, ii. 39.
- Shakespeare*, the merit of his plays examined, i. 45. Was not possessed of a refined taste, 48. Instance of his improper use of metaphor, 343. 350. ib. Exhibits passions in the language of nature, iii. 324. His character as a tragic poet, 337. As a comic poet, 360.
- Shenstone*, his pastoral ballad, iii. 141.
- Shepherd*, the proper character of, in pastoral description, iii. 133.
- Sheridan*, his distinction between ideas and emotions, ii. 402. note.
- Sherlock*, bishop, fine instance of personification cited from his sermons, i. 371. A happy allusion cited from his sermons, ii. 287. note.
- Silius Italicus*, his sublime representation of Hannibal, i. 61. note.
- Simile* distinguished from metaphor, i. 334. 387. Sources of the pleasure they afford, ibid. Two kinds of, 388. Requisites in, 391. Rules for, 394. Local propriety to be adhered to in, 398.
- Simplicity*, applied to style, different senses of the term, ii. 30.
- Smollet*, improper use of figurative style, cited from, i. 341. note.
- Salomon's song*, descriptive beauties of, iii. 173.
- Songs*, Runic, the origin of Gothic history, iii. 104.
- Sophists* of Greece, rise and character of, ii. 171.
- Sophocles*, the plots of his tragedies remarkably simple, iii. 298. Excelled in the pathetic, 324. His character as a tragic poet, 329.
- Sorrow*, why the emotions of, excited by tragedy, communicate pleasure, iii. 305.
- Sounds*, of an awful nature, affect us with sublimity, i. 54. Influence of, in the formation of words, 116.
- Speaker*, public, must be directed more by his ear than by rules, i. 292.
- Spectator*, general character of that publication, ii. 53.

I N D E X.

Critical examination of those papers that treat of the pleasures of imagination, 55.

Speech, the power of, the distinguishing privilege of mankind, i. 1. The grammatical division of, into eight parts not logical, 158. Of the ancients, regulated by musical rules, 288.

Strada, his character as an historian, iii. 66.

Style in language defined, i. 209. The difference of, in different countries, 210. The qualities of a good style, ibid. Perspicuity, 211. Obscurity, owing to indistinct conceptions, 212. Three requisite qualities in perspicuity, 213. Precision, 215. A loose style, from what it proceeds, 217. Too great an attention to precision renders a style dry and barren, 231. French distinction of style, 234. The characters of, flow from peculiar modes of thinking, ii. 7. Different subjects require a different style, 8. Ancient distinctions of, 9. The different kinds of, 10. Concise and diffusive, on what occasions, proper, 11. Nervous and feeble, 15. A harsh style, from what it proceeds, 17. Æra of the formation of our present style, 19. Dry manner described, 20. A plain style, 21. Neat style, 23. Elegant style, 24. Florid style, 25. Natural style, 29. Different senses of the term simplicity, 30. The Greek writers distinguished for simplicity, 34. Vehement style, 42. General directions how to attain a good style, 45. Imitation dangerous, 50. Style not to be studied to the neglect of thoughts, 52. Critical examination of those papers in the Spectator that treat of the pleasures of imagination, 55. Critical examination of a passage in Swift's writings, 129. General observations, 152. See Eloquence.

Sublimity of external objects, and sublimity in writing distinguished; i. 52. Its impressions, ibid. Of space, 53. Of sounds. ibid. Violence of the elements, 54. Solemnity bordering on the terrible, 56. Obscurity, not unfavourable to, 57. In buildings, 59. Heroism, 60. Great virtue, 61. Whether there is any one fundamental quality in the sources of sublime, 62.

I N D E X.

- Sublimity* in writing defined, i. 65. Errors in Longinus pointed out, 66. The most ancient writers afford the most striking instances of sublimity, 69. Sublime representation of the Deity in Psalm xviii. ibid. And in the prophet Habakkuk, 70. In Moses and Isaiah, ibid. Instances of sublimity in Homer, 72. In Ossian, 74. Amplification injurious to sublimity, 75. Rhyme in English verse, unfavourable to, 76. Strength essential to sublime writing, 79. A proper choice of circumstances essential to sublime description, 81. Strictures on Virgil's description of Mount Ætna, 83. The proper sources of the sublime, 85. Sublimity consists in the thought, not in the words, 86. The faults opposed to the sublime, 88.
- Sully*, duke de, character of his memoirs, iii. 69.
- Superstition*, Sublime representation of its dominion over mankind, from Lucretius, i. 58. note.
- Swift*, observations on his style, i. 214. 231. 243. 251. 277. 300. General character of his style, ii. 22. Critical examination of the beginning of his proposal for correcting, &c. the English tongue, 129. Concluding observations, 151. His language, iii. 15. Character of his epistolary writing, 86.
- Syllables*, English, cannot be so exactly measured by metrical feet, as those of Greek and Latin, i. 292.
- Synecdoche*, in figurative style, explained, i. 332.
- Synonymous* words, observations on, i. 223.

T

- Tacitus*, character of his style, ii. 12. His character as an historian, iii. 50. His happy manner of introducing incidental observations, 52. Instance of his successful talent in historical painting, 60. His defects as a writer, 61.
- Tasso*, a passage from his Gerusalemme distinguished by the harmony of numbers, i. 305. Strained sentiments in his pastorals, iii. 133. Character of his Aminta,

I N D E X,

- Aminta*, 142. Critical examination of his poem, 262.
- Taste*, true, the uses of, in common life, i. 12. Definition of, 18. Is more or less common to all men, 19. Is an improveable faculty, 22. How to be refined, 23. Is assisted by reason, 25. A good heart requisite to a just taste, 26. Delicacy and correctness the characters of perfect taste, 28. Whether there be any standard of taste, 30. The diversity of, in different men, no evidence of their tastes being corrupted, 31. The test of, referred to the concurring voice of the polished part of mankind, 37. Distinguished from genius, 46. The sources of pleasure in, 49. The powers of, enlarge the sphere of our pleasures, 51. Imitation, as a source of pleasure, 105. Music, ibid. To what class the pleasures received from eloquence, poetry, and fine writing are to be referred, ibid.
- Telemachus*. See Fenelon.
- Temple*, Sir William, observations on his style, i. 219. Specimens, 234. 250. 255. 262. 294. His general character as a writer, ii. 36.
- Terence*, beautiful instance of simplicity from, ii. 34. His character as a dramatic writer, iii. 355.
- Terminations* of words, the variations of, in the Greek and Latin languages, favourable to the liberty of transposition, i. 138.
- Theocritus*, the earliest known writer of pastorals, iii. 126. His talent in painting rural scenery, 130. Character of his pastorals, 137.
- Thomson*, fine passage from, where he animates all nature, i. 374. Character of his seasons, iii. 166. His elogium by Dr. Johnson, 168. note.
- Thuanus*, his character as an historian, iii. 46.
- Thucydides*, his character as an historian, iii. 44. Was the first who introduced orations in historical narration, 62.
- Tillotson*, archbishop, observations on his style, i. 219. 245. 293. 343. General character of, as a writer, ii. 35.

I N D E X.

- Tones*, the due management of, in public speaking, ii. 401.
Topics, among the ancient rhetoricians, explained, ii. 359.
Tragedy, how distinguished from comedy, iii. 285. More particular definition of, 286. Subject and conduct of, 288. Rise and progress of, 291. The three dramatic unities, 296. Division of the representation into acts, 300. The catastrophe, 303. Why the sorrow excited by tragedy communicates pleasure, 305. The proper idea of scenes, and how to be conducted, 307. Characters, 314. Higher degrees of morality inculcated by modern, than by ancient tragedy, 317. Too great use made of the passion of love, on the modern stages, 318. All tragedies expected, to be pathetic, 320. The proper use of moral reflections in, 325. The proper style and versification of, 326. Brief view of the Greek stage, 328. French tragedy, 332. English tragedy, 337. Concluding observations, 342.
Tropes, a definition of, i. 312. Origin of, 317. The rhetorical distinctions among, frivolous, 330.
Turnus, the character of, not favourably treated in the Æneid, iii. 251.
Turpin, archbishop of Rheims, a romance writer, iii. 92.
Typographical figures of speech, what, i. 406.

V

- Vanbrugh*, his character as a dramatic writer, iii. 364.
Verbs, their nature and office explained, i. 181. No sentence complete without a verb expressed or implied, 182. The tenses, 183. The advantage of English over the Latin, in the variety of tenses, 184. Active and passive, ibid. Are the most artificial and complex of all the parts of speech, 186.
Verse, blank, more favourable to sublimity than rhyme, i. 78. Instructions for the reading of, ii. 399. Construction of, iii. 119.
Virgil, instances of sublimity in, i. 56. 80. 83. Of harmony, 305. 307. Simplicity of language, 315.

I N D E X.

- Figurative language, 331. 370. 383. Specimens of his pastoral descriptions, iii. 128. note. 134. Character of his pastorals, 137. His Georgics, a perfect model of didactic poetry, 154. The principal beauties in the Georgics, 158. Beautiful descriptions in his Æneid, 174. Critical examination of that poem, 246. Compared with Homer, 254.
- Virtue*, high degrees of, a source of the sublime, i. 61. A necessary ingredient to form an eloquent orator, iii. 4.
- Vision*, the figure of speech so termed, in what it consists, i. 406.
- Unities*, dramatic, the advantages of adhering to, iii. 296. Why the moderns are less restricted to the unities of time and place than the ancients, 310.
- Voice*, the powers of, to be studied in public speaking, ii. 388.
- Voiture*, character of his epistolary writings, iii. 87.
- Voltaire*, his character as an historian, iii. 71. Critical examination of his Henriade, 275. His argument for the use of rhyme in dramatic compositions, 327. His character as a tragic poet, 335.
- Vossius*, Joannes Gerardus, character of his writings on eloquence, iii. 19.

W

- Waller*, the first English poet who brought couplets into vogue, iii. 123.
- Wit* is to be very sparingly used at the bar, ii. 251.
- Words*, obsolete, and new coined, incongruous with purity of style, i. 213. Bad consequences of their being ill chosen, 216. Observations on those termed synonymous, 223. Considered with reference to sound, 282.
- Words* and things, instances of the analogy between, i. 117.

I N D E X

Writers of genius, why they have been more numerous in one age than another, iii. 25. Four happy ages of, pointed out, ibid.

Writing, two kinds of, distinguished, i. 142. Pictures the first essay in, ibid. Hieroglyphic, the second, 143. Chinese Characters, 146. Arithmetical figures, 147. The considerations which led to the invention of an alphabet, 148. Cadmus's alphabet the origin of that now used, 151. Historical account of the materials used to receive writing, 153. General remarks, ibid. See Grammar.

Y

Young, Dr. his poetical character, i. 355. Too fond of antitheses, 401. The merit of his works examined, iii. 163. His character as a tragic poet, 341.

T H E E N D.

trous
ages

res
d, es,
on of cateakka,

nd of red,

